Tommy Coleman is a partner in Drew Eckl & Farnham's Albany office. His practice covers local government, in particular, litigations related to municipalities, public finance, election law, zoning and land use planning. With a background in local government and finance, Tommy has built a distinguished list of clients including many cities, counties, school boards and regional solid waste management authorities.

Tommy entered the legal arena following an extensive career as a public servant. He served four terms as Mayor of the City of Albany and four years as a City Commissioner of the City of Albany. In addition, he is a graduate of Leadership Georgia and in 1992 was named "100 Most Influential Georgians" by Georgia Trend Magazine.
