About

Ryan Hathcock joined Drew Eckl & Farnham in 2016 as an associate and focuses the majority of his practice on representing insurers, employers and self-insurers throughout Georgia in workers' compensation claims. Ryan assists clients in claims reporting and initial investigation of work injuries. He also assists his clients by handling claims from origination through the discovery and litigation process to resolution.

Prior to joining Drew Eckl & Farnham, Ryan practiced law in West Virginia and Kentucky representing primarily trucking and construction companies. As a part of his practice in the construction industry he assisted small business owners in creating legal entities and acted as corporate counsel for a land ownership company. He assisted numerous businesses in their transfer of ownership interests, filing of patents with the federal government, and assisted in the annual reporting of financial information pursuant to federal law.

During the representation of various midsize and small construction companies, Ryan has pursued legal action on behalf of his clients in breach of contract claims including the preparation and filing of lawsuits and enforcement of judgements. Ryan also assisted in the defense of multi-party litigation claims involving wrongful death, contractor disputes, payment disputes, bond claims, collection enforcement, breach of contract, and engineering defects.

Ryan continues to stay up to date with workers' compensation and construction litigation trends in Georgia and surrounding states to assist individuals, companies, and insurance carriers with various needs related to workers' compensation litigation, corporate formation, annual reporting, and general litigation.
