About

Sharon focuses on defending employers, insurers, and self-insurers in the area of workers' compensation.

She spent the first two years of her career prosecuting criminal cases, where she honed her skills as a detail-oriented practitioner who was relentless in pursuing every possible lead to achieve the best outcome in the matter. In 2001, she went on to pursue the private practice of law, drawing upon these skills to provide proactive, detail-oriented counsel for her business clients to help them solve their workers' compensation and employment law challenges.

In 2014, she moved to Melbourne, Australia, where she practiced law in the area of workers' compensation and common law negligence, representing the Victorian WorkCover Authority. She returned to Atlanta in 2016 to resume her workers' compensation practice.
